Comprehensive Treatise on the Art of Training the Modern Flyer.

The Make-Up of a Perfect Yearling Runner and the Prominent Features.

An Authority Gives Some Points to Breeders Which Will Be of Interest to Montana Growers.

A treatise on the art of training the racehorse is commenced in this week's Turf-Field and Farm. The first paper is devoted to describing in a most thorough manner a perfect horse, being designed to give assistance in purchasing yearlings. The author promises in future numbers to enlighten the reader upon proper methods of breaking, stabling, feeding, clothing, physicing, judging, entering, riding and starting, and, in fact, cover in a practicable manner the methods of developing the horse profitably. The make-up of a perfect yearling runner is thus described:

The shape of the head does not so much matter, except that the forehead should be broad, denoting volume of brain; the eyes far apart, prominent and observant. A big or sunken eye denotes sullenness, intractability and want of courage; a furtive eve, showing much of the white, denotes vice. Roman-nosed horses are often hardy and enduring, like their ancient human prototypes, whereas those whose frontal bone is concave are the reverse; but there is no unvarying law. The jaws should be wide beneath, so as to give room for the windpipe, which should be large and loose. The nos-trils wide, and the muzzle not too small; a small mouth in man, woman or horse de-notes weakness of character. The lips small mouth in man, woman or norse denotes weakness of character. The lips should be firm and closed: a pendulous lip shows indecision and physical weakness, which is often its cause. The head should be set on at a proper angle to the neck,
which between the axes of both should be about a hundred degrees. Setting on at a much lesser angle produces roaring; at a greater angle, weakness and a bad mouth,
which does not give and take to the rider's
hand as it should do.

The neck ought to be strong and muscular to sustain the weight of the head (in racing the neck tires first); it should not be too long, and the hand should feel it firm and substantial under the main. This indi cates a good constitution. It should swell out gradually to the head and shoulder, showing no very marked junction with the latter. The mane should be thin and silky.
Shakespeare says:

Shakespeare says:

"Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttocks, tender hide;" and he is right.

The shoulder should be oblique, and the scapula, or shoulder-blade, should extend far back to where it joins, or rather is sus pended, for there is no joint here, at the wither; it should also be long, giving an appearance of oblique length to the shoulder, which in this form is enabled to sustain the iar caused by the great stride and speed of which in this form is enabled to sustain the jar caused by the great stride and speed of the thoroughbred. With harness horses and others the shoulder is more upright, which gives rigidity at the expense of elasticity. This elasticity enables the horse to recover himself after the completion of the stride. The humerus, or lower shoulder bone, must also be long, and set onto the shoulder-blade at a proper angle—about ninety degrees. This angle leaves the greatest freedom for extension and recovery of the forelegs.

When the lower shoulder bone is long the elbow is pushed backward, and this, coupled with the length of the shoulder blade, gives to the fore-hand of the colt, looking at it desired by connoisseurs, while an apparent smallness is the result of a conformation the reverse of the above. The skeleton described should be thickly covered with muscle, which gives an appearance of roundness to the angularities. The fore-legs should be straight in their general conformation, and perpendicular, whereby the utility of the well-shaped shoulder is preserved.

The radius, or bone of the fore-arm, The radius, or bone of the fore-arm, should be long, and the arm itself large, muscular, and full in the outline; the knee large and broad in the front, giving plenty of surface for the attachment of muscle; and, with the joint generally, should have an aspect of coarseness in the thoroughbred. The cannon bone should be short. Animals who have this bone shortest, coupled with the longest fore-arm, are the speediest; this formation being most striking in the grey-hound of all our domestic animals. The el-bow should neither be turned into the flank, nor out. If turned in, the legs are turned out and have to bear the shock of galloping out and have to bear the shock of galloping in part latterly, while there is interference between it and the ribs. Such horses are generally bad walkers. If out, the toes are turned in, which is not so weak a form as the other, but detracts from the speed.

I have said that the leg should be straight; this is particularly the case below the knee to the fetlock. If the back outline of the lag is conveyed, what is called calls kneed it.

the other, but detracts from the speed.

I have said that the leg should be straight; this is particularly the case below the knee to the fetlock. If the back ontline of the leg is convexed, what is called calf-kneed, it is a sure sign of weakness; such horses seldom stand training. The reverse of this shape is unsightly; nevertheless, horses so formed seldom break down. The leg should with its tendon, appear broad and flat, and the latter, called the back sinew, or flexor, tendon, should be clearly defined. This sinew should be quite straight; if it is inched in or tied below the knee weakness is denoted. The fetlock, like the other joints, should be large, to facilitate the attachment of muscle, and have a hard, clean look. Thene the pastern should descend at an angle of forty-five degrees to the perpendicular. A lesser angle would jar and a greater weaken the structure. The pastern pendicular. A lesser angle would jar and a greater weaken the structure. The pastern should be slender, clean and hard-looking. The foot should be of good size at the same angle as the pastern, and the horn smooth and without rings or streaks, which are sure indications of disease. The frog should be large filling up the heel, and both it and the sole should be tough and strong, and the latter concave. Standing in front of the colt, the outline of the chest from the wither to the bottom of the chest should appear like a flattened oval, smaller at the wither end, and narrow compared with that wither end, and narrow compared with that of a horse used for any other purpose except racing.

If the chest is too wide, and this is perhaps the greatest fault in a horse intended for racing, the forelegs will stand wide apart, and a grent deal of daylight will be seen through them, which ought not to be.
I have seldom seen a horse so formed that could gallop at all, and never one that could stay. The feet ought to come closely together, an inch or so apart. The chest together, an inch or so apart. The chest should be deep in proportion to the width; horses so formed stay the best. A deep, narrow chest expands more readily, and is capable of more expansion in ressonse to the action of the lungs, as will be explained more fully later on. As the chest should be narrow, so should the body behind the shoulders, whose muscles should swell out so as to keep the saddle in its place; at the same time the section through that part of the body should not sink inward suddenly toward the lower part of the girth behind the elbow.

the body should not sink inward suddenly toward the lower part of the girth behind the eibow.

The withers should be strong, not fine or "knifey." The for aer denotes strong muscular attachment of the shoulder cartilage to the spine and a full development of the ligament by which the forehand is suspended thereto. A strong wither also tends to keep the saddle in its place. Looking again sideways at the horse, the chest should rise slightly toward the belly till at least eight inches from the elbow, when the lower outline should fall very slightly; this formation indicates the place for the girth, and where girth measurements are taken. The more of the horse there is in front of the very best remedy. Every bottle sold has given relief in every case. One man took six bottles and was cured of rheumatism of ten years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Belleville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my twenty years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the liver, kidneys or blood. Only half a dollar a bottle at R. S. Hale & Co.'s drug store.

Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been

fore-hand.

The ribs should be long, and terminate about five inches from the hip. A horse so formed is termed "well ribbed up" and "long in the back rib," two desirable things, denoting strength and good feeding qualities. A wide gap there is a source of weakness; so is a short back rib. The latter is to a certain extent allowable with mares, but not with horses.

The hips should be wide and prominent and the stifle turned out. This gives the hind-quarters free play, and prevents interference with the ribs. The horse so formed stands with his hocks close together.

The three principal bones of the hind-quarters should have nearly the same relative position as those of the fore-quarters, and, like these, must be long.

The quarters should droop along the upper bone about forty-five degrees from the line of the backbone, and the line to the tail very much less; but this lutter is an unimportant matter, a considerable droop siving however a rather common appear.

tail very much less; but this latter is an unimportant matter, a considerable droop giving, however, a rather common appearance, which is termed "goose rump," but does not affect a horse for good or evil. From the point of the hock to the fetlock the leg should fall straigh: and perpendicular; it must be broad and flat, with the flexor tendon clearly defined, as in the foreleg. The hock should be broad, coarse, bony and clean; delicacy in appearance means weakness.

bony and clean; delicacy in appearance means weakness.

If the posterior outline below the point is convex, curbs are indicated; if concave, weakness, as in fore-legs, "tied below the knee." The fetlock should, like the other joints, be large, and both the pasterns and hoof may descend more perpendicularly than in the fore-leg, while the hind feet will be smaller and shorter than the fore feet. Standing now behind the horse, the buttocks must be broad—the broader the better—and tapering to the hock, with the outer line generally convex, denoting muscular line generally convex, denoting muscular development in the thighs and second thighs, the shape resembling a peg-top; the inner thighs should be well filled up with muscle, the absence of which gives that appearance called "split up behind."

called "split up behind."

Looking at the colt sideways, the line from the top of the quarters to the wither should be nearly horizontal, the wither slightly lower, especially in yearlings. The wither is apt to rise with age more than the quarter. I do not like a horse with high withers; the fore action likely to be higher than is desirable horses so formed have than is desirable, horses so formed have seldom that daisy-cutting action so gratifyseldom that daisy-cutting action so gratify-ing to the eyes of an expert. Eclipse was very low before, and, I may add, went, very low behind, bringing his hind feet well out-side his fore. In this respect many of our best race-horses resemble him. Finally, it may be said that the tail ought to be strong and thick. A weak tail denotes a weak constitution; so does a loose, flaccid anus.

The King Must Keep His Promises. Washington, Dec. 12.-Senator Cockrell of Missouri, received a letter from Secretary Blaine yesterday, in regard to three Americans who left this country about a year ago to take service under the king of Corea, and who were very summarily dismissed a few days ago. Mr. Blaine stated he had cabled and sent written instructions to the American consul-general at Seoul, Corea, ordering him to insist in the name of his government that the king shall faithfully carry cevery contract he had made with Col. Cu mings and his companions. These gentle-men on entering the Corean service did not renounce their American citizenship.
